With President-elect Donald Trump set to take office in 10 days, the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors chose to create a division to protect undocumented residents. Supervisors created the Office of Immigrant Affairs to combat any immigration policies that Trump may enact that could affect the county's undocumented residents.

During their morning meeting, protesters and supporters of immigration reform stood on the steps of the Hall of Administration to speak out.

Immigration reform supporters said politicians need to take care of American citizens first.

"The benefits that they're entitled to are given away to illegals - and that's wrong. College educations are given away to illegals instead of American citizens, or even veterans for that matter," Raul Rodriguez said. Supervisor Hilda Solis said the new office will protect immigrants at all levels of government.
